A short biography (Jason Betsill) :

I come from a third generation building family and eight generations of Betsill carpenters. Our family settled in Fayette County Georgia in the late 1800's and was one of the original charter families of the County. My grandfather, Alex, was a custom homebuilder in the Metro Atlanta area in the Early 1960's where he constructed numerous homes throughout the area. He was a true "craftsman" in the truest sense of the word. My father was always on job sites with his father, learning quality construction in early childhood. As he got older, he spent many years working alongside his father (my grandfather). They would not simply oversee the construction of the job site through scheduling of subcontractors and suppliers. They would physically perform many of the aspects of construction with their own hands. This included many facets such as stacking blocks for the foundation walls, framing and roofing the home as well as running electrical, plumbing, interior wood trim, etc.

From the time I could walk, I too was on job sites with my father. As I got older, I began to work in construction also. I was alongside my father building homes with our own hands and learning about how to do things "the right way" which we lovingly referred to as "the Betsill way". Each home I have ever lived in I helped to construct. I learned each facet of construction, and what to look for during construction to ensure the home was built in a quality manner. I spent many summers setting slab form boards, setting walls, rafters, decking roofs, installing windows, installing trimwork, etc. Many times I would attend school during the day, go to football practice after school, and then come home to help drive nails on the family home until dark. I spent many summers helping build barns, sheds, houses, etc. In high school, I performed warranty and general framing on homes built for sale by our family.

After leaving High School I attended the State University of West Georgia and graduated in 1999 with a Bachelor's Degree in Business Administration and a minor in Computer Science. Upon graduating from college, I began full time work in construction as a general contractor (homebuilder). In the past eleven years my father and I have constructed over six hundred fifty homes in the Metro Atlanta area as well as a few dozen commercial buildings and several residential developments. In 2000, I elected to obtain my Georgia Real Estate License and in 2003 I elected to obtain a Georgia Real Estate Broker's License.
